Bio

I am a Texas born interdisciplinary artist living in San Diego. I completed my BFA in Sculpture and graduated with departmental distinction from Southern Methodist University. While an undergrad, I participated in the Independent Studio Programme at Slade School of Art in London. In 2006, I earned an MFA in Printmedia from The School of The Art Institute of Chicago where I was a Trustee Scholar.

While at SAIC, I studied photography with Brian Ulrich and Ken Fandell. I also taught with and was mentored by author James McManus. My writing has published in outlets such as Slate.com, fecalface.com, Chicago Art Magazine, the Bad At Sports website, and The San Diego Union Tribune.

I have taught courses in both the Photography and Printmedia departments at SAIC and worked as an arts administrator for The Illinois Arts Council, The Palo Alto Arts Center, and New Langton Arts in San Francisco. During this past presidential election, I served on Barack Obama's National Arts Policy Committee.

When I'm not writing or making art, you'll most likely find me at a poker table. I finished second in the 2006 World Series of Poker No Limit Hold'em Ladies event, but these days pot limit Omaha is my game.
